His body was taken to New London and interred in St. Mary's cemetery.
He has been in this country but a few months, obtaining work on state road construction in Salem a few weeks ago. Wednesday afternoon he abandoned work and going to the adis doing the work, which is being rushed forward with all possible speed. The present season has witnessed the greatest scarcity of water in years, and while the running of the plant has not been interfered with, the management have deemed it best to have this new reservoir built in order to guard against possible trouble and annoyance later on.

tide to make a landing at the clubhouse.

and swept into the water, carrying with it Janitor Geary, who was holding onto the pole.

DRAGGED FROM THE WATER FOR BOY'S BODY

Lad Turned Up in the Evening after having been to a Picnic and Anxious to Find Out the Cause of the Excitement.

Throughout the afternoon the public wharf at the foot of Rose place was lined with people, while Laurel Hill bridge and other vantage points had many spectators watching the police dragging the river about the wharf for the body of Pietro Paolo Vera, a boy who was drowned last week. The fact that the boy was supposed to have fallen overboard while fishing early in the day.

The boy with an ankle aged about five, had come to the wharf about seven o'clock Thursday morning with a partner. The fact that the boy was of Vaughan's foundry, but nothing had been seen of the big boy all day, although the little fellow had been seen going home. The facts were reported to Chief Murphy and he had the small boy brought to police headquarters.

The little fellow said that he had been fishing off the wharf early in the morning and fell overboard. The last he remembered was that he was in the water and went out of sight. He went down and never appeared again.
This was about 2 o'clock when these statements were secured and the chief had policemen Henderson and Irish get trapping irons and make a search for the body but without result. They rowed about the wharf for three hours and then policemen Irish gave way to David Henderson, who worked the hooks, but no body was found, although about everything else was brought to the surface. The small boy was on the wharf during the afternoon crying because of the drawing of the body. He had not told anyone of the affair until questioned by the police.

One of the boys employed at Powers Brook stated that he saw Pietro about nine or nine-thirty but when other boys fished a blue cap out of the river about 4:30, there seemed to be more certainty that the boy was in the river. Pietro's father arrived about that time and declared that the cap did not belong to Pietro, which further complicated the matter.

It was cleared up, however, when the boy was seen to come down Rose alley about 8:30 o'clock, eager to find out what the crowd was gathered there for. He relieved the crowd considerably when he announced that his family had been told that the boy had not drowned but had been on a picnic all day instead of being in the mud at the Shetucket river bottom. He had gone with the Salvation Army to the picnic at Ocean beach, where he had spent a delightful day, carefree and happy.

How the little fellow came to tell such a story is not known, except that the big boy may have fooled him in some way in order to skip him and on the picnic. The affair caused much excitement and some blistered hands and aching backs for the policemen.
It is needless to say that the family of Pietro was greatly relieved when he appeared as if from the dead.

GRACE CHURCH CELEBRATES

TENTH ANNIVERSARY.

Exercises Were Largely Attended, Several Ministers Participating.

The tenth anniversary of Grace Memorial Baptist church was celebrated on Thursday evening at the grating at Hopkins & Allen's and cut two bad gashes on the left side of his forehead.
Before any one of the half dozen doctors who had been called could respond he had lost a large amount of blood from his wounds, which bled profusely, and he fainted before he was taken home in a hack after the wounds had been sewed up at Dodge's store by Dr. E. Walker.

Mr. Rodden was tripped by his cane, and when he fell came down on his head on the grating. One cut was down over his eye and the other higher up, close to the hair. This bled the worst and had to be stitched up twice before it was closed.

After he fell the injured man with blood streaming down his face was led across the street by a boy to Dodge's store, where the stable man and other neighbors began to telephone for a doctor. Five or six were tried before Dr. Walker was reached. Those trying to get a physician by telephone were highly wrought up over the cold blooded way in which their calls were overlooked. One or two physicians pleaded other calls, and in other cases those who answered the calls made careful inquiry to know who was hurt, and when they found it was a poor man whom nobody knew, they appeared to lose interest in the case.

As Mr. Rodden seemed to be in danger of bleeding to death, those who were trying to help him were indignant at the way their calls were treated.

son-in-law of the injured man, John Carlihan, who is employed at Hopkins & Allen's, was attracted by the commotion, and came out of the shop to the assistance of his relative.
